Includes Measurable Formative and Summative Assessments
Requires Written Task

Poetry Pre-Assessment will measure prior knowledge (individual assessment).
Use popsicle sticks for formative assessment/participation/understanding during lesson.

Exit slip for review and check of understanding of a difference and a similarity between prose and poetry. (Sentence format)
Future lessons will reinforce when songs are played for identification of poetry elements.

Distribute colored popsicle sticks as students enter the room. Tell them that this is an activity that will be revealed soon. Ask the students how they identify different genres, specifically poetry and prose. Give the pre-assessment to identify students’ prior knowledge and mastery.

- Students with the same color sticks should be seated together.
- Review with students the characteristics of poetry and prose. Use eagle examples to demonstrate this difference. (Prose:Poetry::Building:Sculpture analogy)
- Assist the students as they work in groups to use a Venn diagram to illustrate how these two genres are alike and different. (Both use language and literary devices and are enriched because of these devices. Both convey messages or themes. Poetry’s structure is different and sometimes spelling. Prose is in sentences and paragraphs and is usually longer.)

Show the lyrics of a song on the board.

- Distribute copies of Poetry Glossary for students to put in their language arts notebook.
- Discuss with students the literary elements that are present.
- Highlight these elements as they are found. (Use popsicle sticks to randomize students.)
- Demonstrate how to determine the rhyme scheme for the poem and how this would be written.
- Discuss mood and point of view.
- If a student has not identified the song already as a song, inform them that these are actually song lyrics. Explain that lyrics are poetry set to music.
- Discuss what purpose music could serve to improve the poem.
- Allow the students to listen to the song. Discuss what the music adds to the poem? Does it change it? Does it emphasize anything? Does it help to hook the reader? What is the reason that lyrics, set to music, draw us in? How does the addition of music impact the mood?
- Using a new song/lyrics/poem, put the words on the board, give the students a copy, and allow them to identify poetic and literary elements within the work.
- Call on students, using popsicle sticks, to highlight these elements on the board as they are identified. Discuss them.
- Discuss point of view, theme, mood, and rhyme scheme.
- Allow the students to listen to the song. Discuss what the music adds to the poem? Does it change it? Does it emphasize anything? Does it help to hook the reader?
